Public Questions to Council 29th October 2026

1. Trudy Clark:

“On 1st October the Government released their Resilience Action Plan, a whole-of-society strategy to prepare for, respond to, and recover from national emergencies. Under the UK Government Resilience Framework and its accompanying Resilience Action Plan, local councils act as Category 1 responders. This legally obligates them under the Civil Contingencies Act 2004 to lead local emergency planning and community recovery. Whilst I am aware this Council has some strategies in place, the Governments plan mentions issues that are generally unprepared for, such as cyber attack. How ever prepared this Council is at present, can you truly say you are aware of, and could deal with all threats? Not long ago every member of this Council was invited to a showing of The National Emergency Briefing, twice. Only 4 of you came.

The National Emergency Briefing directly addresses the systemic risks councils must prepare for under the national resilience framework, and local councils, such as Cambridge City Council and Suffolk have held their own viewings for their councillors, why haven't you? Why is this council and its councillors not watching the National Emergency Briefing?”

2. Martin Little:

“What position would this Council take on any project which was to take 4,500 acres of best and most versatile agricultural land in the Borough out of food production for at least 60 years. Given that if put down to wheat such an area would produce 25.5 million loaves of bread per year!”
