Options for the draft CTS scheme for 2018/219 were presented to the Panel on 17 July 2017 and the preferred draft CTS scheme was chosen. This was agreed by Cabinet on 6 September 2017. The draft CTS scheme was then opened to public consultation from 7 September 2017 to 18 October 2017. 15 responses were received, down from 31 responses last year.

The report detailed the results of the consultation and the recommended final CTS scheme for 2018/2019.

Restoring a sign of the times for King's Lynn...

The beautiful sign welcoming visitors to King's Lynn will soon be returning to its home, and it will look better than ever. Stephanie Lewis takes a closer look at the locally-undertaken restoration work

Norfolk is famous for its green and white flag signs, and visitors to King's Lynn may wonder why such an important and beautiful sign should have such a sign. It had to be removed from its home on the South Gate roundabout to be replaced. But now, after a painstaking process of repair and restoration, it is about to be returned to its original site. The Borough Council of King's Lynn is proud to announce that the sign will be restored to its original site. The sign was last restored in 2014, but it had become significantly damaged by the weather.

As nominations for the 2018 Mayor's Design Awards open, it's time to celebrate the very best of local expertise – in terms of architecture, design, construction and craftsmanship

It's time for your grand designs to reach a greater stage, as the nominations for the Mayor's Design Awards 2018, organised by the Borough Council of King's Lynn & West Norfolk in association with RL Magazine, open in November. These prestigious awards recognise local architectural excellence and craftsmanship and highlight the role good design plays in making our community an attractive place to live and visit. Having received our borough since becoming Mayor I've seen at firsthand the vision and skills of our local designers, architects and builders. Through the many magnificent buildings that our 'lovely' and 'lovely' Mayor City Carol Bower. It's time to see how quality design and careful craftsmanship can make such a difference in the local community – whether it's a completely modern build or enhancing something back to its original splendour. These awards provide an all-encompassing platform for the most desirable place to live. It's certainly been an eye-opener for me and I hope many of the schemes I've seen will be nominated for awards when they open in November. In fact, Carol's keen to ensure next year's awards maintain the high standards the Mayor's Design Awards have set over the last 17 years. "Please nominate and encourage others to nominate schemes that are innovative and attractive and that enhance our local", she says. How to make sense of permission in principle

The government has recently introduced the concept of 'planning in principle' – Stuart Ashworth of the Borough Council of King's Lynn & West Norfolk explains what it means for you

Earlier this year, and as an addition to the traditional planning application process, the Government introduced the first phase of an alternative way of obtaining planning permission for housing-led development, known as 'permission in principle' (PiP). The PiP consent route has two distinct stages; the first stage (or permission in principle stage) establishes whether a site is suitable in principle for housing-led development, and the second stage for technical details consent (TDC) stage is when the detailed development proposals are assessed.

HOW DO YOU OBTAIN PERMISSION IN PRINCIPLE?

At present, the only way to obtain PiP is through a site being placed on Part 2 of a council's two-part 'brownfield land register' – a register the council must keep of previously developed (or brownfield) sites deemed suitable for residential development in its area.

These sites on Part 2 of the register will have already gone through a process of publicity, notification and consultation to ensure there's still a level of public involvement in the process. However, it should be noted there is no requirement at present for councils to provide a Part 2 of the register – so for the time being this element of the register will be voluntary. All councils must have a basic brownfield register in place by 31st December 2021.

If PiP is granted, its scope is limited to location, land use and the amount of development – with other matters to be considered at the technical details stage (TDC).

HOW WILL TECHNICAL DETAILS CONSENT WORK?

Following the granting of PiP, the site must then receive Technical Details Consent (TDC) before development can proceed. The granting of TDC has the effect of granting planning permission for the development, and other statutory requirements may apply at this stage – relating to protected species or listed buildings for example.

An application for technical details consent must be in accordance with the relevant PiP, and must be determined within five years of the PiP being granted.

It is at this stage that a lot of the information typically required through a planning application will need to be submitted, and councils can attach planning conditions to a Technical Details Consent in the same way they would with a planning application. TDC can be refused by a council, but there is the right of appeal for applicants – again in the same way that a planning application can be appealed.

FUTURE EXPANSION OF PiP AND TECHNICAL DETAILS CONSENT...

Further legislation is proposed by the Government to expand the use of these powers to make it possible to obtain a PiP through a Local Plan allocation or through an application to the council for non-major (less than 20 dwellings) development. This will make the PiP regime much more usable and available, and the Government is committed to its expansion.

With regards to Local Plan allocations, this will effectively grant outline consent for sites allocated in a Local Plan. This will increase the importance of allocations in a Local Plan, and residents will need to make any comments on the principle of developing a site at that plan stage – because if they wait until the Technical Details Stage, the principle will already have been established and the issues will be restricted to the technical details of the application only.

HOW MUCH WILL THIS COST?

There is no fee for a site to be included on a council's brownfield land register, but there is likely to be a fee for submission of an application to a council. The Government has promised to amend the fee regulations (they've confirmed they'll be increased by 20% across the board in the Autumn) and this will need to include PiPs and TDC.

WHY THE NEED FOR PiP AND TECHNICAL DETAILS CONSENT?

In essence, the Government is looking to speed up, simplify and provide more certainty into the planning process in the continuing drive for more housing across the country. It's seeking to reduce the number of times developers have to seek permission to develop a site.

In relation to the plans for PiP for allocations in a Local Plan, the Government is undoubtedly looking to provide more certainty to developers and housebuilders. Whilst having an allocation in a Local Plan under the current system should give a degree of certainty to developers, many subsequent outline applications across the country often run into difficulties when they're submitted. It's often at that stage that opposition to a scheme grows. Granting PiP through an allocation in the Local Plan will therefore provide the opportunity for developers to avoid what can be potentially controversial and often unpopular planning applications – which may ultimately be refused by councils despite having gone through an allocation process in the Local Plan. With regards the new PiP application process, it's perhaps less clear cut what the specific benefits will be at present. The Government's argument is that outline planning applications still require a great deal of information up front; meaning developers have to expend significant time and costs without any certainty that a certain development will be able to go ahead in principle.

They say that PiP offers an alternative route for providing early certainty on the in-principle matters: use, location and amount of development. This will allow developers to spend money on a proposed development with more certainty around the principle – perhaps helping obtain finance for any proposed scheme.

However, a lot of information will still be required for TDC, and there's no guarantee the same issues or problems won't arise at that stage. It therefore remains to be seen whether developers take up PiPs and then TDC as useful alternatives to the current planning permission regime.

'Massive investment in the town and its surrounding areas is really starting to pay off' says Alistair Beales

There is much happening in King's Lynn and West Norfolk at the moment. It is difficult to capture it all, writes Alistair Beales, borough council cabinet member for corporate projects and assets. One of the most noticeable projects is the multi-million-pound, private sector-led development scheme in the town centre, which will provide new retail units anchored by an HM Store. We are delighted to have been able to support this project through a reorganisation of the town, and are pleased to see the work is already well underway. The town's master plan has just been published, following consultation, for the potential development of the East Quay and South Quay area of the King's Lynn waterfront. This £10 million mixed use scheme is led by the borough council. Our next steps will be to progress a further phase of surveys and the design of infrastructure required for the site. The key to this project will be attracting appropriate investors/Developers, so we are at the very early stages of this scheme. The Nar Osse Business Park 'Space to Innovate' Enterprise Zone is a prime site of employment land. Activities have already been provided to the parameters of the site and a further 60.3 million of infrastructure works will be undertaken to enable commercial development on site in 2019. The £2.5 million King's Lynn Innovation Centre is already on the site, and has become home to 17 businesses recently, but it is hoped the low unemployment figures in this area and the demand for skilled workers will mean that those who lost their jobs will soon find employment again. Brexit uncertainty continues to create challenges for businesses across the county and West Norfolk is no exception. On the whole, businesses are still cautiously optimistic and very much getting on with the job, whilst keeping an eye on the bigger picture. Planned investment continuing with work now well underway at RAF Marham on their £400-million project to provide new facilities to accommodate the F35 Lightning. Construction on Alden Park's £45-million new Combined Heat and Power energy plant is under way and is expected to be operational in the first quarter of 2019. Other big expansion have undertaken major investment including £40 million at Beales and £10 million at Mars Food UK. Investment in other parts of the county helps to boost business confidence in the area. The business improvement district is now established in the town's retail area. The former Beales department store has been demolished to make way for new retail units, anchored by HM. The Heritage Lottery Townscape Heritage Initiative is now starting to pay dividends with some major improvements to properties in the Saturday Market Place and St James Street, creating new homes and businesses in the historic town of Lynn. The King's Lynn Innovation Centre, based within the Nar Osse Business Park 'Space to Innovate' Enterprise Zone, is already home to 17 businesses, which is a really encouraging start. The Enterprise Zone itself offers potential businesses a range of benefits including simplified planning, reduced business rates and superior broadband. A more detailed masterplan for the site will shortly be available and we welcome enquiries from investors, developers and business occupiers. The first from masterplan to develop a new use of the water front to provide a mixed use development has been approved for which both market testing will soon take place. I have no doubt that it will be another challenging year for many and a rewarding one for most. As always, we will continue to work with and listen to local businesses to help encourage and support growth and investment in West Norfolk.

"I am looking forward to reading the nominations and hopefully meeting some of the nominees through this process." The borough council will be looking for evidence to support such applications. Mrs Bower said: "I would strongly urge businesses, both large and small, to take part. We want to hear about the challenges they have faced and overcome and what innovations they have used. Regenerating new life in Lynn Regeneration in King's Lynn writes West Norfolk councillor Alistair Beesley.

There is so much happening in King's Lynn and West Norfolk at the moment it is difficult to capture it all.

One of the most noticeable projects is the multi-million pound, private sector-led redevelopment scheme in Lynn town centre, which will provide new retail units as anchored by an H&M store. We are delighted to have been able to support this project through a renegotiation of the lease and are pleased to see work is already well underway.

The riverfront master plan has just been published, following consultation, for the potential development of the Boat Quay and South Quay area of the Lynn waterfront. This £120m mixed-use scheme is led by the borough council. Our next steps will be to progress a further phase of surveys and the design of infrastructure required for the site.

The key to this project will be attracting appropriate investors/developers, so we are at the very early stages of this scheme.

The Nar Ouse Business Park 'Space to Innovate' Enterprise Zone is a 15ha site of employment land. Utilities have already been provided to the perimeter of the site and a further £8.5m of infrastructure works will be undertaken to enable commercial development on-site from 2019.

The £5.5m King's Lynn Innovation Centre is already on the site and has become home to 17 businesses since it opened last June.

The council's 550-home major housing project with a gross development value of £75m is certainly helping to meet housing need in the area and bringing other benefits including local jobs and new play area and butterfly shelters being refurbished and of course the installation of the Henry, La Strange statue – which received substantial funding from members of the community.

Local apprentices given a start with these starter homes

Three apprentices are kick-starting their construction careers through a major new homes development in King's Lynn.

They will hone their practical skills as members of the team from housing developer Lovell, delivering the 100 homes which make up the Orchard Place development, off Marsh Lane.

The development is being created through a new partnership between Lovell and West Norfolk Council which is bringing much needed new homes to the area, as well as an important sustainable legacy in the form of job and training opportunities.

Seven recruited apprentices Harry Knight, from Torrington St Clement, Lukas Mirovickis from Lynn and Josh Philip from Lynn and Josh Philip from Lynn and Josh Philip from Lynn, are eager to get to work. Working

These young people will become the workforce of the future. It is vital that they can gain real life experience alongside their qualifications so that they can develop into fully defined, much-needed tradespeople."

Lovell regional managing director Simon Motter said: "Delivering training opportunities for local people is an integral part of our large-scale housebuilding programme in partnership with the Borough Council of King's Lynn and West Norfolk. We want the work we're doing in the area to bring about lasting long-term benefits, with investment in new jobs and training alongside the new homes now taking shape. We're delighted to welcome Lukas, Harry and Josh to the Lovell team and look forward to helping them progress to the next stages of their construction careers."

Over the next two years, each and advantage of being on a large development like this is that there are a lot of different issues types to be getting a range of experience and discipline to learn different things."

Lukas Mirovickis, 23, is also making the most of the opportunity to work on site, having already completed his initial NVQ Level 2 carpentry qualifications. He says: "It's getting the experience I need that will help me get a job and it's a helpmate to have confidence about my work. I like the way that every day is different. Working for a company like Lovell also opens up other opportunities for me such as training to be a site manager in the future."

Each of the three trainees will be working on their own, with Lovell providing tools and clothing for much of the work as well as funding their apprenticeships, inclusive of their tuition fees. Each
